

Mastery: This sculpture is mastery because the use of detail and attention towards all aspects of the creature make this piece amazingly realistic. The pattern in the tail creates movement up it's body.

Proficient: This inlay bowl is proficient because they successfully attempt to do this difficult method and the lines and vibrant colors make it interesting to look at. The lines could have been made more interesting and the paint job is a little messy

Developing: this piece is developing because they did not successfully mimic the looks of a pig. It has all the elements of the pig, just not proportional to the body, making for an awkward image.
